The outbreak of COVID-19 has adversely affected multiple industries across the globe. J Turner Research undertook exclusive research among apartment industry leaders to study the impact of COVID-19. Specifically, the questions revolved around the impact of COVID-19 on day-to-day operations, measures taken to prevent a further outbreak, impact on resident communication, and effect on onsite-property resources and leasing.

The results indicate that while most of the industry is actively communicating with residents, a significant percentage is yet to devise policies to protect and assist their corporate and on-site staff in dealing with this crisis. A good majority of the industry leaders anticipate a significant impact on leasing due to this pandemic.

In sync with other industries, multifamily companies are actively communicating with residents per the CDC guidelines, restricting travel, and canceling participation in conferences. As businesses turn to a work-from-home model, 45% of the respondents confirmed this option for their corporate staff and 32% responded as “considering it.” While more than 59% of respondents have made special provisions for the on-site staff to help them deal with this outbreak, 41% are yet to take any action.

As the multifamily industry continues to develop its response to cope with this pandemic, the results of this study can inform management companies to prepare and fine-tune their policies and procedures around Coronavirus.

Executive Summary

The survey saw participation from over 1,400 executives. More than 42% of respondents represent the senior management of companies.
Key Findings

Short-term measures

- 45% of respondents have mandated the corporate staff to work from home as opposed to 32% who responded as “considering it.”

- In line with other businesses, 66% of respondents said that they have imposed travel restrictions, and more than 77% have canceled attending all conferences. One key executive with a major student housing manager said, “we’ve canceled all conferences for the year.”

Special provisions for the on-site staff

- More than 59% of the respondents have made special provisions for the on-site staff, while 41% have not.

- The special provisions include, but are not limited to:
  - Limiting the number of on-site staff that works at one time, two-week work from home rotations, and allowing staff to bring their children to work.
  - Taking precautionary measures on tours, limiting tour hours, and offering virtual tours.
  - Limiting maintenance work orders to emergency only for a few weeks.
  - Out of order signs on coffee machines, not accepting packages in the office, no handshakes, and limiting physical contact.
  - Increased sanitation and cleaning of high traffic areas per CDC guidelines.
  - Canceling resident events and closing amenities such as clubhouse and fitness related.
  - Two-week paid leave if diagnosed/self-quarantined, ability to borrow future PTO to handle COVID-19 related issues.
  - Asking residents if anyone in the home has had symptoms or diagnosis of Coronavirus. Service team to wear protective wear such as booties, masks and gloves before entering homes.

Special communication

- A vast majority of respondents, 81% have confirmed providing special communication to residents via email, texts, and signage throughout the property.

- The communication revolves around temporary changes in policies, how to communicate with the on-site team, submission of work orders, closing of certain amenities, cancellation of resident events, sharing CDC guidelines, and measures taken by the property to prevent the spread of the virus.
Steps taken to prevent the spread

- Most of the measures cited by the respondents to prevent the spread of this virus are in sync with the advisory of CDC and common-sense measures. Some of the answers include:
  - Social distancing – closing or limiting amenities such as gyms, pools, canceling resident events.
  - Disinfecting and extra cleaning of high traffic areas and commonly used surfaces.
  - Limiting resident interaction – encourage pay online, minimize in-person visits, emergency maintenance requests only.
  - Increased resident communication
  - Removing beverage stations and cookie jars.
  - In a 55+ community – daily sanitizing of common areas and offices. Cancellation of all resident events and closing the clubhouse and promoting no congregation of 10 or more in any area.

Impact of “staycations” on on-site staff and resources

- Anticipating a strain on the current resources, over 41% of respondents said that “staycations” would impact the on-site staff and resources, and more than a quarter of respondents believe that this impact will be “significant.”

- Coronavirus is also set to impact leasing in the short-term. More than 39% said that there would be an impact and an equal percentage of respondents believe that this impact will be “significant.”

Question 5: WHAT IS THE NATURE OF THE COMMUNICATION?

The nature of communication sent by properties include:

1. Email blasts and social media posts notifying residents of changes in office and service request policies.
2. Precautions per CDC guidelines, encouraging residents to stay informed from reputable sources such as CDC. Information on consistent hygiene to prevent a further spread.
3. Setting guidelines regarding interaction with the on-site teams: Residents are not allowed in the leasing office unless it is an emergency. No walk-in tours are permitted.
4. Encouraging residents to reduce in-person communication by using emails and the resident portal.
5. Guidance on maintenance work orders: "The team is responding only to emergency work orders." Seeking additional information from residents who submit work orders, "Please let us know if you are requesting maintenance, and someone has traveled or is feeling ill."
6. Information on what should residents do if they suspect that they are sick.
7. Posts on resident portal outlining the measures the company is taking as well as sharing CDC recommendations.
8. Steps the office is taking for extra cleaning of amenities and high traffic areas. Informing residents about the cancelation of resident events and fitness classes.
9. Letters to residents and personal calls to senior resident families and on-site notices.
10. Notifying residents that no common area groups of more than five and with a six-foot radius is permitted.
The steps properties are taking to prevent the spread of Coronavirus include:

1. Increased focus on cleaning and disinfecting: Daily cleaning of common areas, entryways, doorknobs, offices, elevators, and kiosks, etc. Increased sanitary supplies and janitorial services.

2. Additional sanitation stations around the community premises.

3. All employees must wash their hands and go home if showing signs of being sick.

4. Social distancing: Limit interaction with guests, closing the office to the public, offering virtual tours, no physical contact (handshakes) common areas closed, all refreshments removed until further notice.

5. Emergency work orders only, maintenance team to wear protective gear such as gloves, booties, and masks.

6. Closing amenities, canceling all resident events and shuttle services.

7. Keeping sick vendors out and increased resident awareness.

8. Requiring communication via phone and e-mail. Requiring online payment.

9. Employee awareness and protocols updated frequently by Risk Management. Shift work in teams, 1/2 the team to work at home at all times.

10. Travel guidelines for staff, PTO accommodations for those who feel sick.
